

More of your lockdown activities

Author: Paul Stimpson

Posted On: June 04, 2020

We are slowly moving towards a time when table tennis activity can resume in a form we all know and love, but in the meantime clubs and individuals are continuing their inventive methods of staying in communication and keeping active together.

Clubs have been meeting online for coaching and get-together sessions and have found ways to keep up their competitive element with challenges.

Woodford Wells TTC launched an in-house challenge series aimed at its younger players, in which they gain points completing challenges and then challenge their fellow players, gaining or losing 'ranking points' according to the outcome. They even played an online knockout tournament.

Club coach Zoltan Hosszu said: "Apart from the usual skill challenges the players had to do physical tasks, mainly table tennis related footwork and mobility exercises, trick shots and even video analysis.

"The programme proved to be very successful, almost all our juniors joined and enjoyed themselves. Those who struggled mentally during lock down found it a lifeline, not just participating but simply staying in constant touch with friends; the keen ones found new goals to work towards, and some developed new skills and were inspired to push themselves further."

Check out some of the best bits below:

Meanwhile, Portishead TTC put together this great video of their members keeping a rally going while discussing their favourite players – and ice cream!

Mark Dare, our 2017 Coach of the Year, has been running an online course for Cromer Tennis and Squash Club in Norfolk, which has table tennis teams playing in the North Norfolk League.

The 10-week course, aimed at beginners up to local league players, had been planned to run in person, but Mark has had to adapt to run it online. He was even dubbed the sport's answer to fitness guru Joe Wicks in his local media, which covered the story.

The course covers everything from grip and stance to footwork and how to play the common shots, plus tactical thinking, and has more than 70 people signed up.

Click here to watch the video tutorial on backhand drive

England No 2 Maria Tsaptsinos has launched her own YouTube channel and has been in the kitchen making a Victoria sponge in a recent instalment, which – by her own admission – did not turn out ideally, as you can see here:

Bishop Auckland TTC have been going down memory lane with a series of photo flashbacks on social media, and they have also been among those clubs putting their volunteers in the spotlight during Volunteers Week 2020, as this tweet shows:

#volunteerweek2020

a big thanks to all the coaches both in the video and not for the hours of hard work you do for the club and its members pic.twitter.com/b9Pv7f8g3h

– BishopAucklandTTC (@bishopttc) June 4, 2020

There have been plenty of examples on social media of clubs continuing their great work online, including the following:

Our 50+ group have been having a weekly catch up on Zoom to keep in contact with each other. They discuss and go through a portrait of one of the group that has been selected. Great to see such friendship in the club. @TableTennisENG @TeesValleySport pic.twitter.com/JT9LTwMmJi

– Ormesby Table Tennis (@OrmesbyTTC) May 30, 2020

Thanks to our local MP @lloyd_rm for coming down and helping out at the BTTC Food Hub yesterday. Lloyd helped collect a load of meals made by @gleaningSUSSEX and did a great job bagging up pasta

Photo by @alexismaryon pic.twitter.com/ieZxssBDQA

– Brighton Table Tennis Club (@BTTCOfficial) May 30, 2020

Downloaded From:

<https://newsarchive.tabletennisengland.co.uk/news/archived/more-of-your-lockdown-activities/>