Sam Walker and Charlotte Bardsley were both eliminated from their respective singles at the European Championships in Warsaw today – but both still have the doubles to aim for.

Walker, who finished second in his group yesterday, went into the qualification rounds to earn a place in the main draw, and he advanced through the first of those with a four-game victory over Eric Glod of Luxembourg (WR 210).

He next faced Tobias Rasmussen of Denmark, a player he knows well having partnered him to the Men's Doubles quarter-finals of these championships in 2018 – the first English player to have reached that stage since 1990.

It was close, but once Rasmussen had edged the first two games 13-11, 11-9, it was a big ask for Walker, and the Dane was able to close out the match in the third game, 11-6.

Walker is through to the main draw of the doubles, however, as he and partner Filip Zeljko of Croatia defeated Michael Tauber & Yonatan Shusterman of Israel in three straight.

In the Women's Singles, Bardsley had chances in her third and final group match, against the second-ranked player in the group, Bernadett Balint of Hungary. The tie was effectively a winner-take-all match to see who would qualify behind the top player in the group, Katarzyna Grzybowska-Franc.

Bardsley led 10-8 and 11-10 in the first game against Balint, and later saved three game points before losing it 16-14. She then fought back from 8-2 down to lead 11-10 in the second, but saw her opponent hit back to win that game 13-11.

Thereafter it proved too much for the Englishwoman to turn around and she lost the third and final game 11-3.

Meanwhile, Wales' Anna Hursey, the youngest competitor in the field, reached the main draw as she topped her qualifying group thanks to a 3-1 (11-7, 11-7, 8-11, 11-6) victory over Prithika Pavade of France – her second win over a higher-ranked opponent.
