The future of table tennis begins now

Table tennis has had a tough time of breaking into the mainstream. Despite being the second most played sport in the world, the sport's image has not captured the hearts and minds of the general public.

Uberpong aims to change all that by combining great art and design with table tennis bats. Graphic designers, illustrators and artists from around the world have contributed their work to the programme and these will be printed professionally onto the rubber.

"Andre Agassi changed the way tennis was perceived when he wore crazy outfits on his way to winning Grand Slam tournaments," says founder David Lowe. "We want to do a similar thing with ping-pong. The Uberpong bat designs are an extension of your personality. We want you to play with style,"

Uberpong is a Kickstarter project and they need your help to hit their funding target. If they miss it, they get nothing! To get behind Uberpong click here.
