Sam Walker had an outstanding campaign at the Hungarian Open in Tata with great performances in all three disciplines over the weekend, taking his form from the team event into successful singles and doubles campaign.

Alongside Helshan Weerasinghe and George Downing he started impressively in the team event despite England being defeated in the group stages. Walker won twice against Hungary, once against Lithuania and suffered his only defeat, a narrow 3-0 (11-6, 14-12, 15-13) loss to Roman Rezetka from the Slovakian A side that won the group.

Walker's next exploits were in the doubles event where he partnered Hungarian Gergely Sabjan to the quarter-finals. There they were only beaten by second seeds David Reitspies and Jakub Seibert in a five-game thriller 3-2 (9-11, 11-9, 5-11, 14-12, 13-11).

Not satisfied with his performances in the doubles, he took his form into the singles where he waltzed through the group stages with ease – recording three successive 3-0 victories. After winning his last 64 knockout game against Iran's Mahdi Najafi 4-0, he overturned the seedings against promising French youngster Alexandre Cassin 4-1 (11-7, 6-11, 11-9, 11-7, 11-5).

That meant he made the last 16 stage where he met the tournament's top seed, and eventual winner, Lee Chia-Sheng (TPE) who beat him in six tight games 4-2 (8-11, 11-9, 9-11, 11-8, 11-7, 11-9).

His compatriots in Hungary were overshadowed by Walker's achievements with Weerasinghe and Downing both making the last 64 in the boys singles but only to lose to higher seeded players. Weerasinghe was particularly unfortunate in his narrow 4-3 (11-9, 11-4, 9-11, 8-11, 9-11, 11-3, 12-10) defeat to top German junior Florian Schreiner, who eventually made the quarter-finals.

Finally, Maria Tsaptsinos, the sole female representative from England, had little fortune in pairing up with two Canadian girls for her team campaign although she did manage to reach the girls last 64 in her singles matches before losing to defender Linda Bergstrom from Sweden.
