

University's new sporting HQ promises to be a winner

Author: Paul Stimpson

Posted On: November 05, 2015

Nicola Deaton-Perry can't wait for the opening of a new £40 million facility which will help the University of Nottingham's table tennis programme become even more cutting edge.

The university this week released a virtual tour of the David Ross Sports Village, which is under construction and will be completed next year.

It will feature a sportshall big enough for 20 badminton courts, plus a 200-station fitness suite, sports performance clinic, strength and conditioning centre, alongside other sports facilities.

Click here to take the virtual tour

Nicola, Director of the table tennis programme, said: "This new facility is very exciting and will undoubtedly help to enhance the already existing high performance Table Tennis programme."

For more information on table tennis at the university, please contact Alex Perry on Alexander.perry@nottingham.ac.uk

Downloaded From:

<https://newsarchive.tabletennisengland.co.uk/news/archived/universitys-new-sporting-hq-promises-to-be-a-winner/>