A weekend of reckoning awaits Britain's best teams as the conclusion of the 2015/16 Premier British League season takes place in Ormesby.

With four games to play, all eight teams still have something to fight for, whether it be relegation or the prestigious British League title.

In the race at the top, Sycamore have a two-point advantage going into the final weekend, however they are far from guaranteed the title with fixtures against the other top three teams still to play. With Drumchapel and Ormesby awaiting them, and the latter just two points behind, there is plenty left to play for.

Although, rumour has it Sycamore might have a top secret weapon up their sleeve . . .

As for the remaining five teams, they all still have the risk of relegation to contend with. While Batts and Fusion are likely to be fine, the prospects don't look as cheery for Kingfisher, who will need to win a minimum of three matches to avoid relegation, but have amassed only one point all season.

That leaves London Academy and Cardiff City, who look set to fight it out for survival. Both teams start the weekend on six points, and although they don't play each other this weekend, both will have more than one eye on the other.
